

What does a conviction appeal mean?

- It means that the convicted person in your case has lodged an appeal against his/her conviction.
- The Appeals Section in the Office of the DPP will be dealing with this case.
- Even though a convicted person who is in prison can apply for bail while waiting for the appeal to be heard.
- When all of the paperwork is completed by the convicted person's legal team, they can apply for bail.
- The Appeal Court judges will read the written record (the transcripts) of all the evidence.

What to expect at the court hearing

- There is no need for you to attend the appeal hearing, but you can attend if you want to.
- The investigating Garda will keep you informed about the appeal.
- The investigating Garda can arrange a meeting with the prosecuting counsel and solicitor.
- The appeal will be heard by three judges sitting in the Court of Appeal (Criminal) which is part of the High Court.
- On the hearing date the three judges will hear legal submissions from both the prosecution and the defence.
- It is extremely rare that any witnesses will be called to give evidence at this hearing.
- If the judges need more time to consider the case, they will reconvene on another date to hear the case.
- If the judges believe the original trial did not contain an error in law, the original conviction will stand.
- A conviction will only be overturned if they decide there was an error in the law at the trial.
- If a conviction is overturned, a re-trial may be ordered.

Who to contact if you have further queries

- If you have any further queries, please contact the investigating Garda who will pass any queries on to the Office of the DPP.
